RE: Pothole Filling Machine

J-93-0615

In our deliberation to find what we thought was the best pothole filling machine for Fort Wayne, we wanted Council to know that there is approximately $7,000 difference in the pothole filling machines being evaluated. All machines have local distributors. All machines place aggregate and asphalt emulsion into a pothole. Because of the difference in price, we have spent a lot of time on the evaluation process. Our main concerns are of a technical nature: i.e., cold weather application, heating unit for the emulsion, the stone feed system, and the most important part, the coating of the stone with asphalt emulsion. In addition, the Rosco patcher uses an asphalt pump to supply the liquid to the discharge tube. This type of system can also cause difficulties during cold weather operation.

So that we could be correct in our decision, we have asked two disinterested persons to give us their opinion between the two machines. Mr Phil Ehrman, who is the District Director for Elf Asphalt and Mr. Bill Dailey, were asked to evaluate the specs and give us their independent opinion. Both Messrs. Dailey and Ehrman have stated that the coating of the stone prior to discharge was the key element for success, especially so in cold weather operation. The AMZ pothole machine was the only machine to adequately perform this operation. Bill Dailey also was of the opinion that the asphalt pump system used by the Rosco patcher could cause problems during cold weather operation. Concerning the Duraco pothole machine, there was some question as to whether the asphalt heating system on this unit would be adequate in cold weather operation. After conferring with a current owner of this machine, it was stated that they indeed had to retrofit their machine with a generator as an alternate heating source in order to maintain proper temperature of the asphalt liquid during cold weather operation. This advise indicates the acceptance of the more expensive machine. It is the machine of our choice and we believe it is the one that will best serve the needs of Fort Wayne.
